Food Safety Incidents – What Happens? Responding to a food safety incident

Food producers face many challenges, not the least of which are issues around food safety and food safety incidents. To enable the food industry to better understand what happens and how to respond, Brian Delroy is a food technologist who commenced his career in product development and QC with the food industry before moving into the regulatory field with AQIS export food inspection. He has been with the Department of Health in South Australia for 10 years and has conducted a large number of food safety investigations in this state. He will present a 1 hour seminar followed by networking drinks.

Items to be covered include:

- What happens when the Dept of Health finds a problem with a food product
- How did they identify the problem?
- Role of the Dept of Health
- How they communicate with the media
- Interaction with and responsibilities of others, eg. PIRSA, Dairy Authority
- What the Dept of Health can do to help us
- What the food industry can do to help

Date : Wednesday 25th July, 2007
Time: Seminar - 4.30pm – 5.30pm followed by networking drinks from 5.30pm – 7.30pm
